

NEW FACE IN CONGRESS.

GUSTAVE A. SCHNEEBELI.

Congressman from Pennsylvania—Gustave A. Schneebeli was born in Neusalz, Germany, May 23, 1852. In 1864 he, with his parents, came to this country, locating at Nazareth, Pa. Here he was educated. At the age of sixteen he left school and went to work. In 1889 he established a knitting mill at Nazareth, and is now interested in various enterprises, including several trolley lines. Before being elected to the present Congress Mr. Schneebeli had never held political office.

FROSTY WEATHER ON THE WAY HERE

Cold Wave That Covered Western States Yesterday Will Sweep Southward.

34 DEGREES BELOW UP NORTH

Mercury in This City Expected to Fall From 20 to 30 Degrees To-day.

(By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—The Weather Bureau to-day sent out the following special cold wave forecast:

The severe cold wave that covers the Western States to-day will sweep southward over the Gulf coast to-night and eastward over the Atlantic coast States and northern half of Florida Monday and Tuesday night.

The Weather Bureau announced that the cold wave was felt from Texas north to Manitoba, and including the States of Kansas, Missouri, Indiana, Minnesota, Wisconsin, upper Michigan, Colorado, Ohio, Iowa, Kentucky, Western Tennessee and Arkansas. Although the indications are that the freezing weather will extend to the northern half of Florida, the Weather Bureau officials say that from present indications they do not look for cold enough weather in that section to damage the orange crop.

Some of the low temperatures reported to the weather Bureau at 8 o'clock to-night, were the following:

At Duluth, Minn., 14 degrees below zero; at White River, Canada, 34 degrees below; and about zero in various parts of the Michigan peninsula. In portions of Oklahoma, the temperature fell to 18 degrees above zero and at Abilene, Texas, it was 22 degrees above.

Blizzard in Texas. (By Associated Press.) AUSTIN, TEXAS, February 4.—A blizzard caused the mercury to fall twelve degrees in eleven minutes to-day. It swept all through central and South Texas. It was preceded by the usual warm spell of several days' duration. Last night at 8 o'clock, the mercury registered 25 degrees above, a drop of 45 degrees since 4 o'clock. A heavy rainfall accompanied the norther.

Richmond Gets Hers. Director Evans, of the Richmond Weather Bureau, stated last night that the mercury in this city will have fallen from 20 to 30 degrees by to-night.

ONE OF THE HUMBERTS RELEASED FROM PRISON. (By Associated Press.) PARIS, February 5.—The correspondent of the Petit Journal at Rennes says that Romain Daurignac arrived there Sunday morning, but that his sister, Madame Humbert, the sewerer, has not yet been released from prison.

A despatch to the Journal from Rennes also says that Madame Humbert has not been released.

Trade With Italy. (By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, D. C., February 4.—A statement prepared by the Department of Commerce and Labor shows that the commerce between Italy and the United States in the fiscal year 1905 aggregated $77,500,000, almost equally divided between imports and exports.

$50,000 for Library. (By Associated Press.) SWARTHMORE, PA., February 4.—President Swain, of Swarthmore College, announced to-night that Andrew Carnegie had offered to donate $50,000 for a new library building on condition that the college shall raise $50,000 for the maintenance of the building.

May Succeed Fortis. (By Associated Press.) ROME, February 4.—King Victor Emmanuel to-day received in audience Baron Sidney Sonnino, the leader of the Centre in the chamber of deputies, who has been mentioned as the successor of former Premier Fortis.

Two Men Killed By Train. (By Associated Press.) NORRISTOWN, PA., February 4.—While walking along the Pennsylvania Railroad tracks last night, near Spring Mill, Joseph Masal, twenty-eight years old, and Michael Augustine, thirty-five years old, both of Spring Mill, were struck by a locomotive of a freight train and they were instantly killed. The train crew were not aware that the men had been killed until they arrived at Conshohocken, when the pilot of the locomotive was found to be covered with blood. An investigation was made, and the bodies of the men were found to-day.

Glass Men to Meet. (By Associated Press.) CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 4.—President Faulkner, of the Amalgamated Window Glass Workers of America, received a telegram from President Hilton, of Port Alleghe, Pa., of the proposed independent glass manufacturers, calling a conference of the promoters of the independent combine to meet here Wednesday. The telegram states that nine of the largest glass manufacturing concerns in the country will be represented in the conference looking for the organization of the independents.

Headaches and Neuralgia from Cold. Laxative Bromo Quinine. Cures a Cold in One Day, Grip in 2 Days.

Remember the Full Name Laxative Bromo Quinine. Cures a Cold in One Day, Grip in 2 Days.

E. H. Linn. on every 25c.

For Sale by All Druggists. FEHR'S MALT TONIC DEPT., Louisville, Ky.

may be depended upon in convalescence. It is equally beneficial for the aged, young or middle-aged. Taken during colds or gripple it is very strengthening. It makes you feel like life is worth living.

For Sale by All Druggists. FEHR'S MALT TONIC DEPT., Louisville, Ky.

may be depended upon in convalescence. It is equally beneficial for the aged, young or middle-aged. Taken during colds or gripple it is very strengthening. It makes you feel like life is worth living.

For Sale by All Druggists. FEHR'S MALT TONIC DEPT., Louisville, Ky.

UNIONIST PARTY ALREADY IN ROW

British Newspapers Acknowledge That There is a Split Existing.

TROUBLE OVER THE TARIFF

Believed That Mr. Chamberlain Will Withdraw From His Adhesion to Balfour.

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, February 5.—That there is a split in the Unionist party is recognized as an existing fact by the Unionist newspapers this morning. They say it is definitely known that Mr. Balfour and Mr. Chamberlain have agreed to disagree, and that it is believed that Mr. Chamberlain will withdraw from his adhesion to Mr. Balfour and organize a separate party on tariff reform. This, it is admitted by the Standard, the Morning Post and other Unionist newspapers, will be the only course open to Mr. Chamberlain, unless, indeed, Mr. Balfour decides to call a meeting of the party and allow its members to decide the question of leadership. Even then, the papers say, it is not believed that either Mr. Balfour or Mr. Chamberlain will resign, the former premier having told Mr. Chamberlain that he would not accept his tariff reform policy.

The whole situation forms the political background of the hour, and nothing else is discussed in the political clubs.

It was stated very emphatically yesterday that if Mr. Balfour would not agree to call a meeting of the party, former Secretary of State for Home Affairs, Mr. Balfour would be appointed leader of the party, and Mr. Chamberlain would be appointed leader of the party.

There is still a remote chance of Walter Hume Long, former president of the local government board, being asked to accept the leadership, resigned in his position, but Mr. Balfour will refuse anything like a compromise while Mr. Chamberlain insists on standing for protection.

It is even intimated that the intimation to Mr. Balfour to stand for the party in the city of London, may be withdrawn, unless he goes over to Mr. Chamberlain, but this is believed to be hardly likely.

The Liberals will decide to-day whether they will contest the seat for the city of London, and in view of the latest development there is a likelihood of Mr. Balfour having to fight for it.

UGLY DOMESTIC LIFE OF COUNT. (Continued from First Page.)

well known ambitions for political advancement.

It is odd that a rakish husband's steadiness should have made his wife suspicious, but this, according to these gossiping who are in a position to know, is probably true.

Mistaken, Friends Assert. Friends of both are endeavoring to the Countess that she is altogether mistaken in her suspicion of the woman on whose account she has left her husband. These friends seem to be sincere in saying that however gravely she may have been wronged in the other cases which she has condoned, in this matter she has no cause for anger and humiliation.

The suspected woman has been a frequent guest at the festivities given by the Castellanes at the Grand Trianon, and has always passed for a wife above reproach. The friends of this woman find it impossible to believe that the Countess Boni has proof to the contrary. One of the occasions referred to when the Countess condoned apparent misconduct on the part of her husband was the incident on the Castellan yacht.

Count Had Wooded Others. During the previous summer at Newport the Count had paid devoted court to both Miss Anna Gould and to Miss Constance Vanderbilt, now the Duchess of Marlborough. Both these heiresses discouraged Count Boni's devotion.

Paran Stevens during those days appeared as a friend of Castellane, and even arranged a dinner to which Miss Anna Gould came. At the time there was a strong current that the Count staked his last dollar on a dinner party for the Countess, in hopes of finally winning Miss Gould.

The engagement lasted a bare four weeks, and the Marquis and Marquise de Castellane and Count Jean de Castellane came from France for the wedding.

On March 4, 1905, the Count and Miss

Gould were married in the George Gould mansion, No. 27 Fifth Avenue. Archbishop Corrigan performed the ceremony, although it has been denied that the Countess renounced Presbyterianism at the time of her marriage. A few days after the marriage the Count and Countess Boni de Castellane returned to France.

The haughty aristocracy known as the Foubourg Saint Germain set were disinclined to welcome the $100,000 American bride, and a white little was heard of the man who won her. After the birth of the first son the Castellanes began to cut the astonishing figure which has kept them in the public eye constantly.

The Count paid almost a million dollars for a bit of property on a fashionable street, on which he began to erect his mansion. This is in imitation of the Grand Trianon at Versailles, and even to-day it is not entirely finished. The art dealers of London and Paris were invited to send their choicest antiques to beautify the Castellane palace. Later, out of Count Boni's reckless purchases, the international lawsuits with the Wertheimers, of London, arose.

$600,000 a Year Not Enough. Miss Gould's income of $500,000 was unable to cope with her husband's expenditures. Five years after the marriage the bubble burst and George Gould became his sister's trustee. It was found that de Castellane had spent almost $500,000 and creditors appeared on all hands.

Finally the Goulds—George, Edwin and

Miss Helen—determined to assume the debts of the titled son-in-law. The Countess' income was cut down to $500,000, half of which was to be applied to the payment of the debts.

This comparatively meagre income was soon increased by a decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. By this decision the injunction tying up part of the Countess's income was dissolved, and again the Castellanes became possessors of almost $1,000,000. During these days of legal stress Count Boni lost most of the popularity for which he paid so generously.

DIVORCE WOULD MAKE BONI POOR. Anna Gould's $600,000 a Year Has Been Barely Enough to Support Him.

The Count de Castellane would be cut off from any legal interest in the Gould fortune should his wife obtain a divorce. It is the opinion of Judge John F. Dillon, who represented the Goulds during the earlier troubles with Count Boni's finances, that no French law can reach the Gould estate.

According to the will of Jay Gould Miss Anna Gould receives only the income which is paid to her or her legal representatives in America, said Judge Dillon yesterday. "No French law could divert any part of this money to the French estate of Miss Gould."

Eleven years ago almost to a day Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould announced the engagement of Miss Anna Gould to Count Boni de Castellane. One month later they were married. The count, whose family was one of the most aristocratic in France, had been in America six years, ostensibly for business, but he had disavowed his intention to meet an heiress with a view toward repaying his fallen fortunes.

Count Boni appeared often as a huntsman and rode to the hounds at the Meadowbrook and Monmouth County grounds. While hunting with Potter F. Collier's pack he was casually met by Mr. and Mrs. Gould. After a few visits at Lakewood Castellane joined them in a trip to Canada. During the trip to Montreal Count Boni and Miss Gould became engaged.

During the previous summer at Newport the Count had paid devoted court to both Miss Anna Gould and to Miss Constance Vanderbilt, now the Duchess of Marlborough. Both these heiresses discouraged Count Boni's devotion.

Paran Stevens during those days appeared as a friend of Castellane, and even arranged a dinner to which Miss Anna Gould came. At the time there was a strong current that the Count staked his last dollar on a dinner party for the Countess, in hopes of finally winning Miss Gould.

The engagement lasted a bare four weeks, and the Marquis and Marquise de Castellane and Count Jean de Castellane came from France for the wedding.

On March 4, 1905, the Count and Miss

Gould were married in the George Gould mansion, No. 27 Fifth Avenue. Archbishop Corrigan performed the ceremony, although it has been denied that the Countess renounced Presbyterianism at the time of her marriage. A few days after the marriage the Count and Countess Boni de Castellane returned to France.

The haughty aristocracy known as the Foubourg Saint Germain set were disinclined to welcome the $100,000 American bride, and a white little was heard of the man who won her. After the birth of the first son the Castellanes began to cut the astonishing figure which has kept them in the public eye constantly.

Near a Mediterranean port by the orders of Countess Boni one of her guests, a woman of title, was suddenly sent ashore with her baggage. It was then that the Countess read her strongest lecture. She said that she now looked at public opinion, and that she had shown in the most public manner that she could no longer endure the presence of the woman concerned.

Now, said she, "if ever I hear of your name, and I shall hear it with any other woman of your own position in the world I vow to you that I shall divorce and ruin you!"

The Countess has also been jealous in the past of Lady Austin Lee, wife of the First Secretary of the British embassy at Paris. She was Madeline de Wolff, daughter of B. Franklin Smith, of Missouri, to whom Count Boni paid rather exaggerated attentions.

Mind Fully Made Up. Thus far a determination to make the separation final is evinced by Jay Gould's daughter. She has refused, it is reported, to listen to any overtures for at least an amicable separation. She appears bent upon the fullest revenge possible for her husband's lack of faith and for her own long suffering under humiliation.

She is confident that if she gets a divorce the courts will award her the children, and she is planning, so her friends say, to take them to America and bring them up completely out of touch with Europe.

"Let them be made over," she says, "into healthy-hearted Americans, like my own family. That is all I have left to hope from life."

It is of no small consequence to Count Boni—that if his wife divorces him, she can make him penniless also, for as her income is derived from America, no French tribunal has power to award any share of it to her husband, so long, at least, as she remains in the United States.

Count Boni gives out, through his majordomo, that he and his wife are traveling, which, of course, is not true. Edward Kelly, the Countess' lawyer, to-day answered a message of inquiry sent by the World correspondent to the Countess herself, saying that he would answer inquiries about the affair at his office. Immediately after sending this message, Mr. Kelly left town, to be gone until Monday, or perhaps Tuesday.

It is understood that the three children—George, Boni and Jay—are now living at the homes of tutors. Jean de Castellane, brother of the Count, is in charge of the palace on the Bois de Boulogne, on which the Count squandered millions of the Gould fortune in attempting to copy the Grand Trianon of Versailles. He declined to discuss the absence of the Count and Countess, or the report of a rupture in their marital relations.

DIVORCE WOULD MAKE BONI POOR. Anna Gould's $600,000 a Year Has Been Barely Enough to Support Him.

The Count de Castellane would be cut off from any legal interest in the Gould fortune should his wife obtain a divorce. It is the opinion of Judge John F. Dillon, who represented the Goulds during the earlier troubles with Count Boni's finances, that no French law can reach the Gould estate.

According to the will of Jay Gould Miss Anna Gould receives only the income which is paid to her or her legal representatives in America, said Judge Dillon yesterday. "No French law could divert any part of this money to the French estate of Miss Gould."

Eleven years ago almost to a day Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould announced the engagement of Miss Anna Gould to Count Boni de Castellane. One month later they were married. The count, whose family was one of the most aristocratic in France, had been in America six years, ostensibly for business, but he had disavowed his intention to meet an heiress with a view toward repaying his fallen fortunes.

Count Boni appeared often as a huntsman and rode to the hounds at the Meadowbrook and Monmouth County grounds. While hunting with Potter F. Collier's pack he was casually met by Mr. and Mrs. Gould. After a few visits at Lakewood Castellane joined them in a trip to Canada. During the trip to Montreal Count Boni and Miss Gould became engaged.

During the previous summer at Newport the Count had paid devoted court to both Miss Anna Gould and to Miss Constance Vanderbilt, now the Duchess of Marlborough. Both these heiresses discouraged Count Boni's devotion.

Paran Stevens during those days appeared as a friend of Castellane, and even arranged a dinner to which Miss Anna Gould came. At the time there was a strong current that the Count staked his last dollar on a dinner party for the Countess, in hopes of finally winning Miss Gould.

The engagement lasted a bare four weeks, and the Marquis and Marquise de Castellane and Count Jean de Castellane came from France for the wedding.

On March 4, 1905, the Count and Miss

Gould were married in the George Gould mansion, No. 27 Fifth Avenue. Archbishop Corrigan performed the ceremony, although it has been denied that the Countess renounced Presbyterianism at the time of her marriage. A few days after the marriage the Count and Countess Boni de Castellane returned to France.

The haughty aristocracy known as the Foubourg Saint Germain set were disinclined to welcome the $100,000 American bride, and a white little was heard of the man who won her. After the birth of the first son the Castellanes began to cut the astonishing figure which has kept them in the public eye constantly.

The Count paid almost a million dollars for a bit of property on a fashionable street, on which he began to erect his mansion. This is in imitation of the Grand Trianon at Versailles, and even to-day it is not entirely finished. The art dealers of London and Paris were invited to send their choicest antiques to beautify the Castellane palace. Later, out of Count Boni's reckless purchases, the international lawsuits with the Wertheimers, of London, arose.

$600,000 a Year Not Enough. Miss Gould's income of $500,000 was unable to cope with her husband's expenditures. Five years after the marriage the bubble burst and George Gould became his sister's trustee. It was found that de Castellane had spent almost $500,000 and creditors appeared on all hands.

Finally the Goulds—George, Edwin and

Miss Helen—determined to assume the debts of the titled son-in-law. The Countess' income was cut down to $500,000, half of which was to be applied to the payment of the debts.

This comparatively meagre income was soon increased by a decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. By this decision the injunction tying up part of the Countess's income was dissolved, and again the Castellanes became possessors of almost $1,000,000. During these days of legal stress Count Boni lost most of the popularity for which he paid so generously.

DIVORCE WOULD MAKE BONI POOR. Anna Gould's $600,000 a Year Has Been Barely Enough to Support Him.

The Count de Castellane would be cut off from any legal interest in the Gould fortune should his wife obtain a divorce. It is the opinion of Judge John F. Dillon, who represented the Goulds during the earlier troubles with Count Boni's finances, that no French law can reach the Gould estate.

According to the will of Jay Gould Miss Anna Gould receives only the income which is paid to her or her legal representatives in America, said Judge Dillon yesterday. "No French law could divert any part of this money to the French estate of Miss Gould."

Eleven years ago almost to a day Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould announced the engagement of Miss Anna Gould to Count Boni de Castellane. One month later they were married. The count, whose family was one of the most aristocratic in France, had been in America six years, ostensibly for business, but he had disavowed his intention to meet an heiress with a view toward repaying his fallen fortunes.

Count Boni appeared often as a huntsman and rode to the hounds at the Meadowbrook and Monmouth County grounds. While hunting with Potter F. Collier's pack he was casually met by Mr. and Mrs. Gould. After a few visits at Lakewood Castellane joined them in a trip to Canada. During the trip to Montreal Count Boni and Miss Gould became engaged.

During the previous summer at Newport the Count had paid devoted court to both Miss Anna Gould and to Miss Constance Vanderbilt, now the Duchess of Marlborough. Both these heiresses discouraged Count Boni's devotion.

Paran Stevens during those days appeared as a friend of Castellane, and even arranged a dinner to which Miss Anna Gould came. At the time there was a strong current that the Count staked his last dollar on a dinner party for the Countess, in hopes of finally winning Miss Gould.

The engagement lasted a bare four weeks, and the Marquis and Marquise de Castellane and Count Jean de Castellane came from France for the wedding.

On March 4, 1905, the Count and Miss

Gould were married in the George Gould mansion, No. 27 Fifth Avenue. Archbishop Corrigan performed the ceremony, although it has been denied that the Countess renounced Presbyterianism at the time of her marriage. A few days after the marriage the Count and Countess Boni de Castellane returned to France.

The haughty aristocracy known as the Foubourg Saint Germain set were disinclined to welcome the $100,000 American bride, and a white little was heard of the man who won her. After the birth of the first son the Castellanes began to cut the astonishing figure which has kept them in the public eye constantly.

The Count paid almost a million dollars for a bit of property on a fashionable street, on which he began to erect his mansion. This is in imitation of the Grand Trianon at Versailles, and even to-day it is not entirely finished. The art dealers of London and Paris were invited to send their choicest antiques to beautify the Castellane palace. Later, out of Count Boni's reckless purchases, the international lawsuits with the Wertheimers, of London, arose.

$600,000 a Year Not Enough. Miss Gould's income of $500,000 was unable to cope with her husband's expenditures. Five years after the marriage the bubble burst and George Gould became his sister's trustee. It was found that de Castellane had spent almost $500,000 and creditors appeared on all hands.

Finally the Goulds—George, Edwin and

Chartered 1832

The Virginia Fire & Marine

INSURANCE COMPANY,

RICHMOND, VA.

ASSETS JANUARY 1, 1906, $1,134,647.11

WM. H. PALMER, President W. H. MCCARTHY, Secretary

E. B. ADDISON, Vice-President OSCAR D. FITTS, Treasurer

All Varieties of City Property Insured at Lowest Current Rates.

INSURES AGAINST FIRE AND LIGHTNING

Gould were married in the George Gould mansion, No. 27 Fifth Avenue. Archbishop Corrigan performed the ceremony, although it has been denied that the Countess renounced Presbyterianism at the time of her marriage. A few days after the marriage the Count and Countess Boni de Castellane returned to France.

The haughty aristocracy known as the Foubourg Saint Germain set were disinclined to welcome the $100,000 American bride, and a white little was heard of the man who won her. After the birth of the first son the Castellanes began to cut the astonishing figure which has kept them in the public eye constantly.

The Count paid almost a million dollars for a bit of property on a fashionable street, on which he began to erect his mansion. This is in imitation of the Grand Trianon at Versailles, and even to-day it is not entirely finished. The art dealers of London and Paris were invited to send their choicest antiques to beautify the Castellane palace. Later, out of Count Boni's reckless purchases, the international lawsuits with the Wertheimers, of London, arose.

$600,000 a Year Not Enough. Miss Gould's income of $500,000 was unable to cope with her husband's expenditures. Five years after the marriage the bubble burst and George Gould became his sister's trustee. It was found that de Castellane had spent almost $500,000 and creditors appeared on all hands.

Finally the Goulds—George, Edwin and

Miss Helen—determined to assume the debts of the titled son-in-law. The Countess' income was cut down to $500,000, half of which was to be applied to the payment of the debts.

This comparatively meagre income was soon increased by a decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. By this decision the injunction tying up part of the Countess's income was dissolved, and again the Castellanes became possessors of almost $1,000,000. During these days of legal stress Count Boni lost most of the popularity for which he paid so generously.

DIVORCE WOULD MAKE BONI POOR. Anna Gould's $600,000 a Year Has Been Barely Enough to Support Him.

The Count de Castellane would be cut off from any legal interest in the Gould fortune should his wife obtain a divorce. It is the opinion of Judge John F. Dillon, who represented the Goulds during the earlier troubles with Count Boni's finances, that no French law can reach the Gould estate.

According to the will of Jay Gould Miss Anna Gould receives only the income which is paid to her or her legal representatives in America, said Judge Dillon yesterday. "No French law could divert any part of this money to the French estate of Miss Gould."

Eleven years ago almost to a day Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould announced the engagement of Miss Anna Gould to Count Boni de Castellane. One month later they were married. The count, whose family was one of the most aristocratic in France, had been in America six years, ostensibly for business, but he had disavowed his intention to meet an heiress with a view toward repaying his fallen fortunes.

Count Boni appeared often as a huntsman and rode to the hounds at the Meadowbrook and Monmouth County grounds. While hunting with Potter F. Collier's pack he was casually met by Mr. and Mrs. Gould. After a few visits at Lakewood Castellane joined them in a trip to Canada. During the trip to Montreal Count Boni and Miss Gould became engaged.

During the previous summer at Newport the Count had paid devoted court to both Miss Anna Gould and to Miss Constance Vanderbilt, now the Duchess of Marlborough. Both these heiresses discouraged Count Boni's devotion.

Paran Stevens during those days appeared as a friend of Castellane, and even arranged a dinner to which Miss Anna Gould came. At the time there was a strong current that the Count staked his last dollar on a dinner party for the Countess, in hopes of finally winning Miss Gould.

The engagement lasted a bare four weeks, and the Marquis and Marquise de Castellane and Count Jean de Castellane came from France for the wedding.

On March 4, 1905, the Count and Miss

Gould were married in the George Gould mansion, No. 27 Fifth Avenue. Archbishop Corrigan performed the ceremony, although it has been denied that the Countess renounced Presbyterianism at the time of her marriage. A few days after the marriage the Count and Countess Boni de Castellane returned to France.

The haughty aristocracy known as the Foubourg Saint Germain set were disinclined to welcome the $100,000 American bride, and a white little was heard of the man who won her. After the birth of the first son the Castellanes began to cut the astonishing figure which has kept them in the public eye constantly.

The Count paid almost a million dollars for a bit of property on a fashionable street, on which he began to erect his mansion. This is in imitation of the Grand Trianon at Versailles, and even to-day it is not entirely finished. The art dealers of London and Paris were invited to send their choicest antiques to beautify the Castellane palace. Later, out of Count Boni's reckless purchases, the international lawsuits with the Wertheimers, of London, arose.

$600,000 a Year Not Enough. Miss Gould's income of $500,000 was unable to cope with her husband's expenditures. Five years after the marriage the bubble burst and George Gould became his sister's trustee. It was found that de Castellane had spent almost $500,000 and creditors appeared on all hands.

Finally the Goulds—George, Edwin and

Miss Helen—determined to assume the debts of the titled son-in-law. The Countess' income was cut down to $500,000, half of which was to be applied to the payment of the debts.

This comparatively meagre income was soon increased by a decision of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court. By this decision the injunction tying up part of the Countess's income was dissolved, and again the Castellanes became possessors of almost $1,000,000. During these days of legal stress Count Boni lost most of the popularity for which he paid so generously.

DIVORCE WOULD MAKE BONI POOR. Anna Gould's $600,000 a Year Has Been Barely Enough to Support Him.

The Count de Castellane would be cut off from any legal interest in the Gould fortune should his wife obtain a divorce. It is the opinion of Judge John F. Dillon, who represented the Goulds during the earlier troubles with Count Boni's finances, that no French law can reach the Gould estate.

According to the will of Jay Gould Miss Anna Gould receives only the income which is paid to her or her legal representatives in America, said Judge Dillon yesterday. "No French law could divert any part of this money to the French estate of Miss Gould."

Eleven years ago almost to a day Mr. and Mrs. George J. Gould announced the engagement of Miss Anna Gould to Count Boni de Castellane. One month later they were married. The count, whose family was one of the most aristocratic in France, had been in America six years, ostensibly for business, but he had disavowed his intention to meet an heiress with a view toward repaying his fallen fortunes.

Count Boni appeared often as a huntsman and rode to the hounds at the Meadowbrook and Monmouth County grounds. While hunting with Potter F. Collier's pack he was casually met by Mr. and Mrs. Gould. After a few visits at Lakewood Castellane joined them in a trip to Canada. During the trip to Montreal Count Boni and